

DISCUSSION PAPER 162
PROJECT 149
REVIEW OF COLONIAL AND APARTHEID ERA
LEGISLATION

(Laws administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development Impacting on Expressive Rights)

CLOSING DATE FOR COMMENTS
30 SEPTEMBER 2024

ISBN: 978-177997-027-5

© Copyright South African Law Reform Commission
Published 01 July 2024

“It is rather odd that – 20 years into our constitutional democracy – we are left with a statute book cluttered by laws surviving from a bygone era remembered for the oppression of people; the suppression of freedom; discrimination; division; attempts to break up our country; and military dictatorship...”

(Justice Van der Westhuizen in Khohliso v The State, Constitutional Court, 2015)

ABOUT THE SOUTH AFRICAN LAW REFORM COMMISSION

The South African Law Reform Commission (SALRC or Commission) was established by the South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973 (Act 19 of 1973).

The members of the Commission are:

Justice Chris Jafta (Chairperson)
Professor Debbie Collier-Reed
Professor Wesahl Domingo (Deputy Chairperson)
Professor Karthigasen Govender
Professor Tshepo Mongalo
Dr Keneilwe Radebe
Advocate Sejako Joseph Senatle SC
Dr Nazreen Shaik-Peremanov
Advocate Jacob (JB) Skosana

The Secretary of the Commission is Mr Nelson Matibe. The Commissioner designated to this project is Dr Keneilwe Radebe and the official assigned is Fanyana Mdumbe. The Commission offices are situated in Spooral Park Building, 2007, Lenchen Avenue South, Centurion, Pretoria.

The Commission has instituted an advisory committee for this project in terms of section 7A(1)(b)(ii) of the abovementioned Act comprising of:

Professor Shannon Hocter
Dr Keneilwe Radebe
Advocate Ishmael Semenya SC

Correspondence relating to this inquiry should be addressed to:

The Secretary
South African Law Reform Commission
Private Bag X668
Pretoria
0001

Telephone: (012) 622 6353

Fax: (012) 633 6321

Email: fmdumbe@justice.gov.za

Website: <http://www.justice.gov.za/salrc/>

PREFACE

This discussion paper is the penultimate document produced by the South African Law Reform Commission (Commission) in relation to this investigation. It will be followed by a report containing the Commission's final recommendations and a draft Bill which will be submitted to the Minister of Justice and Correctional Services for consideration as contemplated in sections 5(5) and 7(1) of the South African Law Reform Commission Act.

The Commission's remit in this inquiry is to assess whether the pre-democratic era laws administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (DOJ&CD) are compatible with expressive rights contained in sections 15-19 of the Constitution; and to advise, in respect of legislation found wanting in this regard, whether they should be retained, with or without amendments, or revoked. This discussion paper thus provides a synopsis of the preliminary findings and views of the Commission contained in the issue paper; an overview and analysis of the pertinent comments received to the questions contained in the issue paper; the proposals the Commission is inclined to make to the executive as its final recommendations, in this regard, and most importantly, a draft Bill which if enacted and promoted by the DOJ&CD, would give effect to the said recommendations.

As can be gleaned from the preceding paragraph, this discussion paper seeks to afford interested parties an opportunity to express their opinions and views on the proposed reforms to the law. Interested parties are thus implored to submit written submissions in this regard by no later than 30 September 2024.

The Commission will assume that respondents agree to the Commission quoting from, referring or attributing comments to the relevant respondents. Respondents who prefer to remain anonymous should mark their submissions "confidential". However, respondents should be aware that the Commission may be required, in terms of the Promotion of Access to Information Act, 2000 (Act 2 of 2000), to release information contained in representations submitted to it in relation to this inquiry.

This document is also available on the Commission's website, the details of which appear on page (iv).

Table of Contents

About the South African Law Reform Commission	iii
Preface.....	v
Chapter 1: Background	1
A Introduction	1
B Scope of this inquiry.....	1
Chapter 2: Exposition of laws impacting adversely on expressive rights.....	3
A Introduction	3
B Sunday observance laws	4
1 Introduction.....	4
2 The aim of Sunday laws.....	4
3 Criticism levelled at these laws	6
4 Constitutional Court decision in S v Lawrence	7
5 Recommendation.....	9
C Laws regulating the workings of investigatory bodies	10
1 Commissions Act 8 of 1947	10
2 Inquests Act 58 of 1959	14
3 South African Law Reform Commission Act 19 of 1973.....	15
4 Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act 139 of 1991.....	18
D Public order legislation	20
1 Riotous Assemblies Act 17 of 1956	20
2 Trespass Act 6 of 1959.....	33
3 Indemnity Acts of 1961 and 1977.....	33
4 Prohibition of Disguises Act 16 of 1969.....	35
5 Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977	38
6 Section 44 of the General Law Further Amendment Act 93 of 1962.....	38
Annexure A	41
General Laws Amendment Bill	41
List of sources	44
Selected cases	46
Legislation.....	48

CHAPTER 1: BACKGROUND

A Introduction

1.1 When South Africa became a constitutional democracy on 27 April 1994, old-order legislation in force hitherto was retained.¹ While this posed challenges,² it was deemed necessary to enable new structures and authorities to govern and services to continue; and to ensure an orderly transition.³

1.2 The continued existence of these laws and their invocation, particularly in criminal matters, has been criticised by policy and law-makers, academics, ordinary South Africans and the courts, including the Constitutional Court.⁴ This outcry has prompted Parliament to initiate a government-wide review of all pre-democratic era legislation to ensure they are compatible with the spirit and letter of the Constitution, effective, relevant, and necessary. This review forms part of that initiative.

B Scope of this inquiry

1.3 Judging from the submissions the Commission has received,⁵ it appears that laws allegedly inconsistent with the Constitution are pervasive, and affect all functional areas and spheres of government.⁶ The scope of this review, however, is narrow. Firstly, it relates only

¹ Section 229 of the 1993 Constitution and item 2(1)(a) and (b) of Schedule 6 of the Constitution of 1996. See also item 16(6) of Schedule 6 to the Constitution in respect of the rationalisation of legislation regulating the courts. Item 1 of this schedule defines “old-order legislation” as legislation enacted before the previous Constitution [1993 Constitution] took effect.

² For a detailed discussion of these challenges, see Christo Botha Statutory Interpretation-An Introduction for Students Fifth Edition (2012) 29 et seq.

³ Ibid. See also Christo Botha Statutory Interpretation Third Edition (1998) 8.

⁴ See Khohliso v The State 2015 (1) SACR 319 (CC) para 53; Moseneke v The Master 2001 (2) SA 18 (CC) para 21; S v Mlungwana and Others 2019 (1) SACR 429 (CC) para 65; Moyo and Another v Minister of Police and Others 2020 (1) SACR 373 (CC) para 9; and Sithole and Another v Sithole and Another 2021 (5) SA 34 (CC) para 2.

⁵ In May 2021, the Commission and the DOJ&CD issued a press statement inviting interested parties and members of the public generally to participate in this law reform process by identifying laws they consider inimical with the new constitutional order.

⁶ Respondents to the Commission’s call for submissions identified, for example, the Riotous Assemblies Act, 1956 (Act of 1956); the Decree No. 9 (Environmental Conservation) of 1992 of the Republic of Transkei; the Sexual Offences Act, 1957 (Act 23 of 1957); Fertilisers, Farm to legislation administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (DOJ&CD). Secondly, as the laws for which the DOJ&CD is responsible are legion and cover a wide spectrum,⁷ the Commission and the DOJ&CD agreed to focus on laws that adversely impact on the exercise of expressive rights contained in the Constitution.⁸

1.4 Consequently, consideration of laws falling within the mandate of other departments or spheres of government, including those identified in the preceding paragraph or deemed incompatible with expressive rights;⁹ and the regulatory framework applicable to public assemblies, including the Regulation of Gatherings Act,¹⁰ the implementation of which is the responsibility of the Department of Police;¹¹ its effectiveness, inter alia, to curb violent protests and deter the destruction of infrastructure; and compatibility with the Constitution, will be dealt with in turn and gradually as part of this project.

Feeds, Agricultural Remedies and Stock Remedies Act, 1947 (Act 36 of 1947); and the Secret Services Act, 1978 (Act 56 of 1978) as laws that are inimical to the new constitutional order.

⁷ See <https://www.justice.gov.za/legislation/acts/dojcd-acts-administered.pdf> (accessed on 1 February 2024) which lists approximately 110 out of 159 laws administered by the DOJ&CD as being laws predating the constitutional era.

⁸ This refers to the rights to freedom of religion, belief and opinion; expression; assembly; association; and political rights in sections 15-19 of the Constitution.

⁹ For example, section 22A of the Heraldry Act, 1962 (Act 18 of 1962) which makes treating the coat of arms contemptuously an offence and is administered by the Department of Arts and Culture; the Intimidation Act, 1982 (Act 72 of 1982); the Regulation of Gatherings Act, 1993 (Act 205 of 1993); and the Control of Access to Public Premises and Vehicles Act, 1985 (Act 53 of 1985), all of which fall under the Department of Police; and the Referendums Act, 1983 (Act 108 of 1993) which is administered by the Department of Home Affairs.

¹⁰ Act 205 of 1993.

¹¹ See https://www.saps.gov.za/resources_centre/acts/juta_acts.php (accessed 10 February 2023).

CHAPTER 2: EXPOSITION OF LAWS IMPACTING ADVERSELY ON EXPRESSIVE RIGHTS

A Introduction

2.1 The Commission has painstakingly analysed all pre-1994 DOJ&CD laws mainly against the provisions of sections 15-19 of the Constitution, considered the jurisprudence (academic comments and case law) relating thereto, particularly comments relating to the deficiencies in this legislative framework, and surveyed comparable foreign law. Pursuant to the publication of its issue paper, which contained preliminary findings, views, and proposals in this regard,¹² the Commission has received insightful and detailed comments, particularly from the DOJ&CD and Cape Bar Council, which have to a very large extent shaped the recommendations contained in this discussion paper. Unless it is persuaded otherwise or new information comes to light, the Commission is inclined to submit to the government the proposals contained herein as its final proposals. We refer to these submissions in the ensuing paragraphs.

2.2 Notwithstanding the myriad of pre-constitutional era legislation falling within the mandate of the DOJ&CD, only a handful of these have been found by the Commission to fall short of constitutional standards or should be repealed or amended on ground of obsolescence or redundancy. These aforementioned exceptions fall into one of the following categories:

- (a) pre and post-Union legislation that prohibits certain activities on Sundays;¹³
- (b) laws regulating the processes of investigatory bodies;¹⁴ and

¹² South African Law Reform Commission Review of Colonial and Apartheid Era Legislation (Legislation Administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development Impacting on Expressive Rights) Issue Paper 43 (20 October 2023).

¹³ The Cape Province's Sunday Observance Ordinance, 1838 (Ordinance No. 1 of 22 March 1838) and the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1895 (Act 19 of 1895); Transvaal Sunday Law, 1896 (Act 28 of 1896); sections 4 and 5 of the Free State's Police Offences Ordinance, 1902 (Ordinance No. 21 of 1902); and the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act, 1977 (Act 16 of 1977).

¹⁴ The Commissions Act, 1947 (Act 8 of 1947); Inquests Act, 1959 (Act 58 of 1959); the South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973 (Act 19 of 1973); and the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act, 1991 (Act 139 of 1991).

- (c) the regulatory framework relating to public order, public safety and security of the Republic;¹⁵ and ancillary or related legislation.¹⁶

2.3 These laws, their purpose and the extent to which they are deemed incompatible with the Constitution are discussed in detail below.

B Sunday observance laws

1 Introduction

2.4 While a number of so-called “Sunday observance laws” have been repealed,¹⁷ the following have been retained in the statute book:¹⁸

- (a) the Sunday Observance Ordinance, 1838 (Ordinance No. 1 of 22 March 1838) of the Cape of Good Hope;
- (b) the Lord’s Day Observance Act, 1895 (Act 19 of 1895) of the Cape of Good Hope;
- (c) the Sunday Law, 1896 (Act 28 of 1896) of the Transvaal;
- (d) Section 21 of the Police Ordinance, 1902 (Ordinance No. 21 of 1902) of the Orange Free State;¹⁹ and
- (e) the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sunday and Public Holidays Act, 1977 (Act 16 of 1977).

2.5 Broadly, these laws restrict economic activity and public entertainment on Sundays.

2 The aim of Sunday laws

2.6 With the exception of the Police Ordinance of 1902, which is silent on this aspect, the express purpose of these laws is to make provision for due and better observance of the Lord’s

¹⁵ The Riotous Assemblies Act, 1956 (Act 17 of 1956); Trespass Act, 1959 (Act 6 of 1959); section 44 of the General Law Further Amendment Act, 1962 (Act 93 of 1962); the Prohibition of Disguises Act, 1969 (Act 16 of 1969); section 25, 185 and 205 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act 51 of 1977); and the Protection of Information Act, 1982 (Act 84 of 1982).

¹⁶ The Indemnity Act, 1961 (Act 61 of 1961); and the Indemnity Act, 1977 (Act 13 of 1977).

¹⁷ See Businesses Act 71 of 1991 and the General Law Third Amendment Act 129 of 1993.

¹⁸ The pre-1910 legislation referred to was expressly retained by the Pre-Union Statute Laws Revision Act 24 of 1979.

¹⁹ Only sections 4, 5, 21, and 26(1) of this Act were retained by Act 24 of 1979.

Day and Sabbath.²⁰ In respect of the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act, to prohibit exhibition of films on Sundays and certain public holidays.²¹ While the words “Lords Day” and “Sabbath” are not defined, in the context of these laws they refer to “Sunday”.²²

2.7 While provision is made for a few exceptions,²³ these laws prohibit certain activities on Sundays including discharging a firearm, conducting business, public entertainment,²⁴ and the exhibition of films.²⁵ Contravention of these prohibitions is a punishable offence. In certain instances, articles used in the commission of the offence may be seized and disposed of²⁶ and the portion of the fine, goods forfeited or proceeds thereof could, in appropriate circumstances, be awarded, for example, to the informant.²⁷ The prohibition of exhibition of films on Sundays in Act 16 of 1977 extends to public holidays.²⁸

2.8 Other significant features of these laws are that the amount of the fine payable for infractions is expressed in pound sterling; and authorities bestowed with the power to ensure

²⁰ See preambles to Ordinance 22 of 1838, Law 28 of 1896; long title of Act 19 of 1895.

²¹ See the long title of the Prohibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act 16 of 1977. In terms of this legislation ‘Sunday’ includes any public holiday mentioned in the Second Schedule to the Public Holidays Act, 1952 (Act 5 of 1952). This Act was repealed by the Public Holidays Act 36 of 1994 and therefore the aforementioned provision should be read as reference to the 1994 Act.

²² These laws formed part of a gamut of laws that restrained business on Sundays. See JD Van der Vyver (revised by Joan Church) ‘Religion’ in The Law of South Africa First Reissue 23 Volume 23 (2003) 163 para 257.

²³ For instance, supplying Her Majesty naval ships and military forces; selling medicines; supplying food by a hotel; rendering of public service; mining operations; performance of sacred music; vocal and musical performance where admission is free and which is not of an indecent character or calculated to bring ridicule, contempt or disrespect upon religion or morality; and exhibition of films with the consent of local authorities. See in this regard, sections 3, 4 of the Sunday Observance Ordinance of 1838; 3 of the Lord’s Day Observance Act of 1895; 2(c), (d), 4, 5, 7 of the Sunday Law of 1896; 21 of the Police Ordinance, 1902; and section 2(1)-(2) of the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act 16 of 1977.

²⁴ Sections 2, 5 and 6 of the Sunday Observance Ordinance of 1838; 1(a)-(e); 2(a)-(d); 6 and 7 of the Sunday Law, 1896; and 21 of the Police Ordinance, 1902.

²⁵ Section 2 of the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act of 1977. This prohibition, when it is read in conjunction with section 12(1) of the Interpretation Act, 1957 (Act 33 of 1957) and Public Holidays Act, 1994 (Act 36 of 1994), applies to Youth Day, Human Rights Day, Freedom Day Workers’ Day among others.

²⁶ Sections 3 and 8 of the Sunday Law of 1896.

²⁷ Section 10 of the Sunday Law of 1896.

²⁸ Section 1 of Act 16 of 1977 provides that ‘Sunday’ includes any public holiday mentioned in the Second Schedule to the Public Holidays Act 5 of 1952. In terms of section 12(1) of the Interpretation Act, 1957 (Act 33 of 1957) reference to Act 5 of 1952 must be interpreted as reference to the Holidays Act of 1994.

compliance, landdrosts and field cornets, could demand people to disperse or to be admitted free of charge to a performance where consent has been granted.²⁹ Lastly, the laws referred to in the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act have either been repealed or superseded by more recent legislation. These elements, on their own, are sufficient to have these laws repealed on the grounds of redundancy and obsolescence.

2.9 From this brief exposition, the following questions arise:

- (a) whether these laws were intended to provide a common pause day, and thus have a secular character; or to compel observance of the Christian Sabbath, in which event they have a religious objective;
- (b) in view of the constitutional, social, and economic changes that have taken place since 1994, whether they are still useful or have become obsolete or redundant; and
- (c) most importantly for our purposes, whether these laws are consistent with the Constitution, and in particular section 15 thereof.³⁰

3 Criticism levelled at these laws

2.10 The pre-constitutional era government endorsed Christianity.³¹ Van der Vyver explains this preference as follows:

...the Christian bias of certain branches of statutory law, was also evidenced by a series of Sunday observance laws covering a wide range of regulative and prescriptive measures.³²

²⁹ Sections 8 of the Sunday Law of 1896 and 6 of the Lord's Day Observance Act of 1895.

³⁰ Section 15 of the Constitution provides that:

'Freedom of religion, belief and opinion

- (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of conscience, religion, thought, belief and opinion.
- (2) Religious observances may be conducted at state or state-aided institutions, provided that-
 - (a) those observances follow rules made by the appropriate public authorities;
 - (b) they are conducted on an equitable basis; and
 - (c) attendance at them is free and voluntary.
- (3) (a) This section does not prevent legislation recognising-
 - (i) marriages concluded under any tradition, or a system of religious, personal or family law; or
 - (ii) systems of personal and family law under any tradition, or adhered to by persons professing a particular religion.
- (b) Recognition in terms of paragraph (a) must be consistent with this section and the other provisions of the Constitution.'

³¹ See exposition of Justices O'Regan and Sachs in S v Lawrence, S v Negal, S v Solberg 1997 (2) SACR 540 (CC) paras 123 and 149.

³² Van der Vyver 'Religion' in Joubert (ed) The Law of South Africa Vol 23 (1985) quoted by Sachs J in S v Lawrence para 149.

2.11 Besides Sunday laws, commentators³³ were also concerned that legislation regulating public holidays did not treat all faiths even-handedly.³⁴ Although the legislature has substituted the old holidays Act,³⁵ the new Act³⁶ has been slated for maintaining the status quo.³⁷ Unfortunately, the latter falls outside the purview of this inquiry.

2.12 Recently, members of Parliament questioned the relevance of the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act and recommended that it be repealed.³⁸

2.13 Legal commentators³⁹ have warned that any law that chooses Sunday as a rest day would raise the constitutional issue of unfair discrimination on grounds of religion; that the state should not legislate in this regard; and argued that the Labour Relations Act of 1995⁴⁰ which, among other things, gives relief to religiously observant workers whose faith require them to observe dress requirements and religious holidays, adequately tackles the issue of Sunday work and has superseded these laws.

4 Constitutional Court decision in S v Lawrence

2.14 In S v Lawrence,⁴¹ which concerned the constitutionality of provisions in the Liquor Act⁴² prohibiting the sale of alcohol on “closed days” – defined as Sundays, Christmas Day and Good Friday⁴³ - one of the appellants relied on the decision of the Canadian Supreme Court in *R v Big M Drug Mart Ltd*⁴⁴ to bolster her argument that “closed day” had a religious ³³ See Gerrit Pienaar ‘Freedom of Association in the United States and South Africa’ CILSA (1993) 147 163.

³⁴ The Holidays Act, 1952 (Act 5 of 1952) only recognised Christian holidays – Good Friday, Easter Mondays and Christmas Day as public holidays.

³⁵ Act 5 of 1952 was replaced in October 1994 by the Public Holidays Act 36 of 1994.

³⁶ Public Holidays Act 36 of 1994.

³⁷ See Iain Currie and Johan de Waal The Bill of Rights Handbook Fifth Edition (2005) 351.

³⁸ Hansard 22 November 2016 91 et seq.

³⁹ See Iain Currie and De Waal 350-351.

⁴⁰ Act 66 of 1995.

⁴¹ S v Lawrence; S v Negal; S v Solberg 1997 (2) SACR 540 (CC).

⁴² Act 27 of 1989.

⁴³ This law, however, permitted alcohol to be sold by restaurants and hotel and by holder of an on-consumption licence.

⁴⁴ (1985) 13 CRR 64.

purpose; sought to induce submission to a sectarian Christian conception of the proper observance of Christian Sabbath and holidays; and was inconsistent with the right to freedom of religion of those persons who did not hold such beliefs or wished to adhere to them.⁴⁵

2.15 The Canadian courts had previously found, a view confirmed in R v Big M Drug Mart Ltd,⁴⁶ that the object of the Lord's Day Act which, like the Sunday laws, prohibited work or commercial activity on Sundays, was to compel the observance of the Christian Sabbath.⁴⁷ Chaskalson P, writing for the majority, made the following comments about the Canadian Lord's Day Act:

- (a) Firstly, that its name and provisions proclaimed its purpose.⁴⁸
- (b) Secondly, he aligned himself with the reasoning of the court in R v Big M Drug Mart case, and held that he:

...would have no difficulty in holding that a law which compels sabbatical observance of the Christian Sabbath offends against religious freedom of those who do not hold such beliefs:

If I am a Jew or a Sabbatarian or a Muslim, the practice of my religion at least implies my right to work on a Sunday if I wish...any law purely religious in purpose, which denies me that right, must surely infringe my religious freedom.

- (c) Thirdly, and most importantly, he conceded that the Canadian Lord's Day Act had a purely religious purpose and was designed to compel adherence to Christian Sabbath.⁴⁹

⁴⁵ S v Lawrence paras 83-86.

⁴⁶ The Canadian Supreme Court stated in this regard:

'A finding that the Lord's Day Act has a secular purpose is, on the authorities, simply not possible. Its religious purpose, in compelling sabbatical observance, has been long-established and consistently maintained by the Courts of this country.' Id 88.

⁴⁷ Id para 88. (Emphasis added).

⁴⁸ Ibid.

⁴⁹ Id para 90, 92 and 104 read with footnote 83.

2.16 Sachs J too, in his minority concurring judgment, observed that:

...the closed days are a small part of a statute designed to control the sale of liquor *and not, as in Big M Drug Mart case, a central aspect of a statute primarily intended to compel religious observance.*⁵⁰

2.17 The provisions of the Sunday Observance Ordinance of 1838, the Lord's Day Observance Act of 1895, the Sunday Law of 1896, section 21 of the Police Ordinance of 1902, and the Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sunday and Public Holidays Act of 1977 are materially similar in their scope and effect to the Canadian Lord's Day Act and in determining the purpose, relevance and constitutionality of these laws, the views of the Justices of the Constitutional Court and comparable foreign law⁵¹ referred to above are instructive.

5 Recommendation

2.18 In the issue paper, the Commission couched its tentative views in respect of "Sunday observance laws" as follows:

On the basis of the exposition above, in particular the Constitutional Court's views on the meaning and purpose of the right to freedom of religion and comparable Canadian legislation; and the fact that "Sunday laws" under consideration seem to have become obsolete and redundant as a result of constitutional, social and economic changes, the Commission is inclined to recommend that they be repealed.

2.19 This stance has been endorsed by both the DOJ&CD and the Cape Bar Council. These entities agree that the "Sunday observance laws" have been overtaken by circumstances and thus supports the repeal of these laws in toto. According to the Cape Bar Council, the wide array of economic and social activity that takes place on Sunday is sufficient evidence that Sunday laws have become obsolete and redundant.

2.20 The Commission thus recommends the repeal of these laws in their entirety.

⁵⁰ Id para 172. (Emphasis added).

⁵¹ Section 39(1)(c) of the Constitution allows consideration of foreign law when interpreting the Bill of Rights.

C Laws regulating the workings of investigatory bodies

1 Commissions Act 8 of 1947

(a) Overview

2.21 The power to appoint a commission of inquiry is a constitutional power that can only be exercised by the President or a Premier of a province.⁵² Unless it is established by a specific statute and its powers and functions are stipulated therein,⁵³ the workings of a commission of inquiry tasked with investigating a matter of public concern are regulated by the Commissions Act of 1947 and the regulations issued under this Act specifying, inter alia, the manner in which it will discharge its mandate.⁵⁴

(b) Constitutionally suspect provisions of the Commissions Act

2.22 The regulations issued to date to enable commissions to operate varied⁵⁵ and became spent or expired upon the completion of the work by the Commission to which they relate, which obviates their consideration in this discussion paper. In contrast, the Commissions Act has already been found to be in need of updating.⁵⁶ The fact that it contains a reverse onus provision;⁵⁷ makes no provision for the exercise of power to appoint a commission of inquiry by a Premier of a province; and still contains section 1(1)(b)(iii) which is considered below, are all indicative that it falls short of constitutional standards.

⁵² Section 84(2)(f) and 127(2)(e) of the Constitution. For a detailed discussion of this section, see President of the Republic of South Africa and Others v South African Rugby Football Union and Others 2001 (1) SA 1 (CC).

⁵³ For examples, see the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act, 1991 (Act 139 of 1991) and the South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973 (Act 19 of 1973). The latter Act incorporates the provisions of the Commissions Act by reference.

⁵⁴ Section 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Commissions Act give the President the power to declare the provisions of this or any other law applicable to a commission of inquiry; and to make regulations in relation thereto. In terms of section 1(2), the aforesaid regulations may stipulate penalties for the contravention thereof.

⁵⁵ Bell Dewar & Hall Kelsey Stuart's Newspaperman's Guide to the Law Fifth Edition (1990) 117.

⁵⁶ Sections 1(1), 2, 3(1), and 5 of the Commissions Act make reference to functionaries and institutions that no longer exist and use archaic language. See in this regard, the South African Law Reform Commission Discussion Paper 129: Project 25 Statutory Law Revision-Legislation Administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (29 February 2012).

⁵⁷ Section 6(1) of the Commissions Act.

2.23 Section 1(1)(b)(iii) referred to above empowers the President to make regulations:

which he may deem necessary or expedient to prevent the commission or a member of the commission from being insulted, disparaged or belittled, or to prevent the proceedings or findings of the commission from being prejudiced, influenced or anticipated.

2.24 This section has been incorporated into regulations of commissions of inquiry verbatim, accompanied by a threat of prosecution if contravened.⁵⁸ Criminal prosecutions (litigation) relating to these regulations, most of which emanated from the publication of an article by the press before the commission had finalised its work,⁵⁹ have, however, centred on the meaning of the words “prejudicing, influencing or anticipating the proceedings or findings of the commission.” The courts have held that:

- (a) these laws, being penal provisions that interfered with freedom of speech, must be interpreted restrictively⁶⁰ to mean actual prejudice, influence or anticipation⁶¹ or an actual and not a possible finding the commission might make;⁶²
- (b) in order to prove the offence, the prosecution must prove that the conduct complained of actually, and not likely, prejudiced, influenced or anticipated the proceedings or findings of the Commission;⁶³
- (c) have stressed that the sub judice rule and the common-law offence of contempt of court do not apply to commissions of inquiry and that commissions should not be equated with courts of law, even if they are presided over by judges;⁶⁴

⁵⁸ Bell Dewar & Hall 117. See also regulations contravened in cases below.

⁵⁹ See Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspapers Ltd and Others 1979 (3) SA 447 (W); and S v Sparks NO and Others 1980 (3) SA 952 (T).

⁶⁰ S v Sparks 957 and 958; and Government of the Republic of South Africa v ‘Sunday Times’ Newspaper and Another 1995 (2) SA 221 (T) 227.

⁶¹ S v Sparks 958.

⁶² Ibid. To remove any doubt in this regard, the court held that anticipating findings meant publishing them in advance of the Commission doing so itself or stating in advance what the findings will actually be; and anticipating proceedings meant publishing or stating in advance what form the proceedings will take, what witnesses will give evidence and what questions they will be asked in advance. Id 959.

⁶³ Id 958 and 959.

⁶⁴ Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspaper 456; and S v Sparks 960. For an in-depth discussion of the overlap between commissions of inquiry and judicial processes; and consequences of findings and recommendations of commissions, see Hoole Grant “Reconceiving Commission of Inquiry as Plural and Participatory Institutions: A Critical Reflection on Magidiwana” Constitutional Court Review Vol 8 (2016) 221.

- (d) the applicant must satisfy the court about the contents of the publication which it seeks to restrain, must be in possession of the matter about to be published;⁶⁵ and that
- (e) while there may well be circumstances that justify prior restraint, factual basis for them must be provided.⁶⁶

2.25 Undoubtedly, this approach places a hurdle to the successful prosecution of contravention of regulations that spring from section 1(1)(b)(iii) of the Commissions Act.⁶⁷ Moreover, to the extent that these injunctions, as the courts have confirmed, prohibit predictions (in public) of the actual findings of a commission of inquiry, it ought to be asked whether they are consistent with the Constitution,⁶⁸ particularly the rights to freedom of opinion⁶⁹ and expression.⁷⁰ However, this provision has remained unaltered in the statute book.

⁶⁵ Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspapers Ltd and Others 453-454; S v Sparks 959-960.

⁶⁶ 'Sunday Times' Newspaper case 229.

⁶⁷ In S v Sparks 959-960, counsel for the state argued that this approach deprived the said regulations of any effectiveness; and that the state would have to wait for very long periods until such time as it had actually made its findings. In Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspapers Ltd and Others 454 the court held that the applicant, in order to prove the unlawfulness of the act not yet committed, must satisfy the court about the contents of the publication which it seeks to restrain.

⁶⁸ See Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspapers Ltd 452; and S v Sparks 959. In the latter case 960, the court observed:

'It is not the intention of the Legislature to stop public discussion of a matter of public importance simply because a commission is sitting. Even in the case of Court proceedings legitimate discussion of matters of public interest which are the subject of the Court proceedings is not suspended.

Freedom of speech should, even in a case of contempt proceedings, not be limited to any greater extent than is necessary but it cannot be allowed where there would be real prejudice to the administration of justice.

'Justice is not a cloistered virtue: she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful even though outspoken comments of ordinary men.'

⁶⁹ See note 29 above.

⁷⁰ Section 16 of the Constitution provides:

'Freedom of expression

- (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of expression, which includes-
 - (a) freedom of the press and other media;
 - (b) freedom to receive or impart information or ideas;
 - (c) freedom of artistic creativity; and
 - (d) academic freedom and freedom of scientific research.
- (2) The right in subsection (1) does not extend to-
 - (a) propaganda for war;
 - (b) incitement of imminent violence; or

(c) Summary of comments received

2.26 In the issue paper, the Commission invited comments on whether section 1(1)(b)(iii) of the Commissions Act should be retained, amended or repealed.

2.27 The Cape Bar Council recommended the repeal of this provision on the basis that it stands foul of section 16 of the Constitution. It opined that section 1(1)(b)(iv) of the Commissions Act, which it proposed could be renumbered as (iii), is sufficiently wide to provide for specific needs of any Commission, including prohibition of wilful insult of a commission member. The provision referred to by the Cape Bar Council, section 1(1)(b)(iv), empowers the President to make regulations:

providing generally for all matters which he considers it necessary or expedient to prescribe for the purposes of the investigation.

2.28 However, it further proposed that the words “expedient” should be excised from the abovementioned provision as they mean something that is improper or immoral.

2.29 The DOJ&CD, on the other hand, wants the abovementioned provision to be retained as is. However, its inclination is to repeal this Act in its entirety and replaced with modern legislation that would retain most of the current sections, but discard archaic terms such as “Governor-General”, “Union”, “shall”, “he” and “Provincial Division of the Supreme Court”. It also anticipates that this envisaged new law would make provision for (a) the payment of fees to a person who accompanies a witness on account of the witness’s youth, infirmity, etc.; and (b) virtual hearings.

(d) Recommendation

2.30 In view of the fact that work, spearheaded by the DOJ&CD and the National Treasury, is already under way to address a myriad of issues relating to commissions of inquiry, including a determination whether the Commissions Act should be reviewed, the Commission has decided not to make any law reform proposals in relation to this Act. It is hoped that the deficiencies identified and recommendations referred to in this paper will receive attention in the course of the review alluded to above.

(c) advocacy of hatred that is based on race, ethnicity, gender or religion, and that constitutes incitement to cause harm.’

2 Inquests Act 58 of 1959

(a) Impugned provision

2.31 The apartheid government imposed immense restrictions on the media to conceal its repressive activities.⁷¹ One of the laws flagged by the United Nations in the 1980s for imposing such restrictions was the Inquests Act of 1959, particularly section 20(4).⁷² Thirty years into our new constitutional democracy, this provision has been retained in the statute book in its pristine form. It provides:

Any person who prejudices, influences or anticipates the proceedings or findings at an inquest shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding R2 000 or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

2.32 An inquest investigates and establishes facts.⁷³ It is therefore in a position similar to that of a commission of inquiry, but not a court of law.⁷⁴ Therefore, the views expressed above in the context of section 1(1)(b) of the Commissions Act, in particular that sub judice rule does not apply to these bodies, apply here as well.

(b) Submissions and evaluation thereof

2.33 According to the Cape Bar Council, section 20(4) of the Inquests Act does not pass constitutional muster and should be repealed. Its uneasiness about the retention of this provision arises from the fact that whilst the expression of an opinion is constitutionally protected (subject to the constraints in section 16(2) of the Constitution), any person expressing an opinion on the proceedings at an inquest could potentially be found to have “prejudiced”, “influenced” or “anticipated” the proceedings or findings.

2.34 In contrast, the DOJ&CD believes section 20(4) of the Inquests Act serves an important purpose and wants it retained. However, similarly with the Commission’s Act, it is inclined to ⁷¹ United Nations Centre Against Apartheid Restrictions Imposed on the Media in South Africa Since 21 July 1987 United Nations (September 1987) 3.

⁷² United Nations Centre Against Apartheid Restrictions Imposed on the Media 7. Another aspect of this law that has received attention was its use by the apartheid regime to cover-up real causes of death of activists and its ineffectiveness in holding perpetrators accountable. See in this regard, Siphso Mabena “Timol was Pushed to his Death, Judge Rules” TimesLive (2017-10-13); The re-opened inquest into the death of Ahmed Essop Timol [2017] ZAGPPHC 652 (12 October 2017); and George Bizos No One to Blame? In Pursuit of Justice in South Africa (1998).

⁷³ Bell Dewar & Hall Kelsey Stuart’s Newspaperman’s Guide to the Law Fifth Edition (1990) 120.

⁷⁴ Ibid.

repeal the entire Act and replace it with a new Act that will retain most of the current sections thereof; aligned with the Constitution; and devoid of archaic terminology.

(c) Recommendation

2.35 The Commission concurs that such a critical law requires complete overhaul that is done properly rather than hastily or in a piecemeal fashion. In addition, whilst work is yet to commence in this regard, the Commission is confident that the DOJ&CD will explore appropriate legislative options and mechanisms to achieve this goal. It thus makes no recommendations in respect of this legislation.

3 South African Law Reform Commission Act 19 of 1973

2.36 This Act established the South African Law Reform Commission – an entity tasked with reviewing and improving South African law on a regular basis. It stipulates how the Commission is constituted, its powers, and functions.

(a) Deficiencies in this law

2.37 Firstly, absent from this framework is a provision that provides for the determination of procedures and processes of the Commission.⁷⁵ As far as the reports relating to the work of the Commission are concerned, this Act provides that annual reports of the Commission – reports relating to its activities during the year - must be tabled in Parliament; and that reports on specific law reform projects undertaken by the Commission must be submitted to the Minister of Justice for consideration.⁷⁶

⁷⁵ Similar laws, for example, section 5 of the Judicial Services Commission Act 9 of 1994, empower the Minister to determine the Commission procedure by notice in the Gazette.

⁷⁶ Section 7 of the South African Law Reform Commission Act provides:

‘Reports of Commission

- (1) The Commission shall prepare a full report in regard to any matter investigated by it and shall submit such report together with draft legislation, if any, prepared by it, to the Minister for consideration.
- (2) The Commission shall within five months of the end of a financial year of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development submit to the Minister a report on all its activities during that financial year.
- (3) The report referred to in subsection (2) shall be laid upon the Table in Parliament within fourteen days after it was submitted to the Minister, if Parliament is then in session, or, if Parliament is not then in session, within 14 days after the commencement of its next ensuing session.’

2.38 Noticeably, absent from this framework is a provision relating to the publication of commission reports. Although they are invariably published,⁷⁷ there is no statutory obligation on the Commission itself or the Minister of Justice to publish reports of the Commission. It is therefore not clear whether it is the Commission or the Department that must publish such reports; whether the Commission must seek prior approval before doing so; and in what circumstances the government could prohibit the publication of a Commission report and for how long such restraint should last. In certain instances, there have been delays between the submission of a report to government and its publication. Whilst government is the most important stakeholder in the law reform enterprise, the Commission's project-specific reports serve other purposes: they generate debate, are peer reviewed, cited by academics and the courts,⁷⁸ promote the understanding of the law and its operation,⁷⁹ foster transparency and accountability and could lead to greater appreciation of the commission's work,⁸⁰ and thus animate the right to freedom of expression, in particular the right to receive information.⁸¹

2.39 In contrast, in other jurisdictions all commission reports, and not just annual reports, are tabled in Parliament by the functionary responsible for the commission (Minister or Attorney-General).⁸² New Zealand has taken this responsibility a step further. The New Zealand Law Commission Act of 1985 places an obligation on the Commission to publish its reports. Section 16 of this Act provides in this regard:

- 16 Reports
 (1) The Commission—
 (a) shall submit to the responsible Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, every report prepared by it on any aspect of the law of New Zealand; and ⁷⁷ Post-1996 annual reports and project-specific reports are available on the Commission website.

⁷⁸ The Commonwealth Secretariat – Commonwealth Association of Law Reform Agencies Changing the Law: A Practical Guide to Law Reform (2017) 160 et seq.

⁷⁹ William H. Hurlburt, Q.C. Law Reform Commissions in the United Kingdom, Australia and Canada (1986) 401.

⁸⁰ The Commonwealth Secretariat – Commonwealth Association of Law Reform Agencies Changing the Law: A Practical Guide 160.

⁸¹ Section 16 of the Constitution.

⁸² See for example, sections 3(2) and (3) of the Law Commissions Act 1965 (England and Wales); 3(2) and (3) Law Reform Commission Act of 2012 (Kenya); 16(2) of the Law Commission Act 1985 (New Zealand) and 24 of the Law Commission, Canada. The Commonwealth Secretariat – Commonwealth Association of Law Reform Agencies Changing the Law: A Practical Guide to Law Reform (2017)169. According to Kate Warner 'Institutional Architecture' in Brian Opeskin and David Weibrot (eds) The Promise of Law Reform (2005) 69 in other jurisdictions there may be a short period in which reports are subject to parliamentary privilege and prohibited from disclosure.

- (b) shall publish every report submitted to the responsible Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection.
- (2) Where the Commission furnishes to the responsible Minister a report prepared by it on any aspect of the law of New Zealand, the responsible Minister shall lay a copy of that report before Parliament as soon as practicable after the receipt of that report by the Minister.

(b) Summary of comments received

2.40 In the issue paper, the Commission asked whether South African Law Reform Commission Act should be amended to include a provision similar to section 16(1) of the New Zealand Law Commission Act 1985 referred to above and to empower the Minister to determine Commission procedure by notice in the Gazette.

2.41 Both the DOJ&CD and the Cape Bar Council support the inclusion of a provision similar to section 16 of the New Zealand. The DOJ&CD did so for the following reasons: firstly, such a provision would codify the practice adopted by the Commission since 1996 with regard to the publication of its reports; and secondly, would align this Act with, for example, the Judicial Service Commission Act, and thereby promote transparency in the work of the Commission.

(c) Recommendations

2.42 To bring about certainty and to address the deficiencies alluded to above and to give effect to the reform proposals supported by the DOJ&CD and the Cape Bar Council, the Commission recommends:

- (a) that the following provision be inserted in section 5:

The Commission may determine its own procedure but the decision of the Commission must be supported by the majority of its members.

- (b) that section 7 of Act 19 of 1973 be amended as follows:

7 Reports of the Commission

- (1) The Commission [shall] must-
 - (a) prepare a full report in regard to any matter investigated by it and [shall] submit such report together with draft legislation, if any, prepared by it, to the Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, for consideration; and
 - (b) publish every report submitted to the Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection.
- (2) The Commission [shall] must within five months of the end of a financial year of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development submit to the Minister a report on all its activities during that financial year.

(3) The report referred to in subsection (2) [shall] must be laid upon the Table in Parliament by the Minister within fourteen days after it was submitted to [the Minister] him or her, if Parliament is then in session, or, if Parliament is not then in session, within 14 days after the commencement of its next ensuing session.

(c) that consequential amendment to section 10 be made by the substitution for that section of the following section:

10 Regulations

(1) The Minister may make regulations regarding the administration and functioning of the Commission or any other aspect of this Act.

(2) Any regulation made under this section must be tabled in Parliament before the publication thereof in the Gazette.

2.43 If the abovementioned recommendations are promoted, the current section 10 of Act 19 of 1973 will become section 11.

4 Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act 139 of 1991

(a) Purport of this Act

2.44 The Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act established a commission of inquiry under the chairmanship of Judge Goldstone to look into the nature and causes of public violence in South Africa and propose solutions. The work of this commission culminated, inter alia, in the enactment of the Regulation of Gatherings Act of 1993.⁸³

2.45 In terms of this Act, members of this commission - the chairperson and four other members of the Goldstone Commission - were appointed for three years.⁸⁴ It submitted its final report in October 1994⁸⁵ after the conclusion of the inquiry as enjoined by this Act.⁸⁶

⁸³ Act 205 of 1993, which is administered by the Department of Police.

⁸⁴ Section 3(2) of the Act.

⁸⁵ See the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report Volume One (October 1998) 508. In total, this commission submitted 45 reports comprising interim and final reports.

⁸⁶ Section 10 of this Act provides:

‘10 Duties and powers of Commission after conclusion of inquiry

(1) The Commission shall after completion of an inquiry prepare a report for submission to the State President and may at any time before the completion of the inquiry submit an interim report to the State President in respect of any matter which in its opinion should urgently be brought to the attention of the State President.’

(b) Has this law become redundant?

2.46 In contrast, for example, to the South African Law Reform Commission Act⁸⁷ and the Special Investigating Units and Special Tribunal Act,⁸⁸ it is difficult to infer from the provisions of the Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act, as some have,⁸⁹ that it (the law itself) was intended to endure indefinitely or that the Commission it established was meant to be a permanent structure.

2.47 The Commission invited comments on whether this Act has become spent and redundant as a result of the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was enacted, namely the submission of numerous reports by the Goldstone Commission, one of which resulted in the enactment of the Regulation of Gatherings Act.

2.48 There is consensus among the respondents, particularly the Cape Bar Council and the DOJ&CD that this Act has served its purpose, and as a result it has become redundant and that it must be repealed.

(c) Recommendation

2.49 Based on the exposition above and comments received, with which the Commission concurs, on whether this Act has served its purpose, the Commission recommends that Act 139 of 1991 be repealed in its entirety.

⁸⁷ Section 5(1) of the South African Law Reform Commission Act provides that:

'In order to achieve its objects the Commission shall from time to time draw up programmes in which the various matters which in its opinion require consideration are included in order of preference, and shall submit such programmes to the Minister for approval.' (Emphasis added).

⁸⁸ Section 2(1) of Act 74 of 1996 provides that:

'The President may, whenever he or she deems it necessary... establish a Special Investigating Unit in order to investigate the matter concerned; or refer the matter to an existing Special Investigating Unit for investigation...' (Emphasis added).

⁸⁹ Paul Hjul 'Restricting Freedom of Speech or Regulating Gatherings' De Jure (2013) 451 458.

D Public order legislation

1 Riotous Assemblies Act 17 of 1956

(a) Historical overview

2.50 The Riotous Assemblies Act (RAA) is a re-enactment⁹⁰ of its 1914 antecedent.⁹¹ It was a measure designed to counter threats to the state and inevitably made serious inroads into citizens' rights to associate, assemble, and authorised the use of force.⁹² The Constitutional Court has referred to it as legislation of apartheid extraction with a dark past and constitutionally suspect salutation.⁹³ Although emaciated by reforms to security legislation in the 1980s, sections 16-18 of this Act remain in the statute book.⁹⁴ While located in public assembly legislation, these sections deal mainly with inchoate crimes, namely attempt, conspiracy, and incitement.

(b) Analysis of the provisions of the RAA

(i) The long title

2.51 The long title of this Act reads:

To consolidate laws relating to riotous assemblies and the prohibition of the endangering of feelings of hostility between Europeans and non-European inhabitants of the Republic and matters incidental thereto, and the laws relating to certain offences.

⁹⁰ Susan Flint 'The Use of Police Force in Dispersing Gatherings' SA Publiekreg/Public Law Vol 1 Issue 2 (1986) 155 et seq. See also AS Mathews Law, Order and Liberty in South Africa (1971) 191.

⁹¹ Riotous Assemblies and Criminal Law Amendment Act 27 of 1914.

⁹² Susan Flint 156-158. According to Qhuba Dlamini 'Mass Action and the Law: Can South Africa do without the Regulation of Gatherings Act?' African Journal of Rhetoric 86 95 this Act was used to ban peaceful protests.

⁹³ Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services and Another 2021 (1) SACR 387 (CC) para 4.

⁹⁴ In 1979, the government appointed a commission to inquire into and report on the necessity, fairness and efficacy of the internal security legislation under the chairmanship of Judge Rabie. Among other things, its work resulted in the enactment of the Internal Security Act 74 of 1982 which repealed all the provisions of the RAA with the exception of sections 16-18.

2.52 It has been argued that there is nothing inherently undesirable in criminalising the incitement of racial hostility.⁹⁵ However, the Commission has inferred from this long title that the express purpose of the RAA was to suppress political resistance and to manage interaction between race groups in line with apartheid objectives. It concluded that it was inappropriate that terms so deeply rooted in the racist apartheid state still appear in legislation, even if by way of reference.⁹⁶ It recommended that this Act, and the Riotous Assemblies Amendment Act of 1974,⁹⁷ be repealed.

2.53 Justice Majiedt in *Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services and Another*⁹⁸ described this long title as “vile, symbolic of the iniquitous apartheid regime and utterly indefensible in our constitutional dispensation.” He added that its retention is inexplicable and most unfortunate.⁹⁹

(ii) Section 16: handling of explosives

2.54 Section 16(1) and (2) empower the President to prescribe, by means of a proclamation and regulations, how explosives should be handled and renders the contravention of the said regulation and proclamation a punishable offence.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁵ Anthony Mathews Freedom, State Security and the Rule of Law: Dilemmas of the Apartheid Society (1986) 60.

⁹⁶ South African Law Reform Commission Discussion Paper 129 Project 25: Statutory Law Revision – Legislation Administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (October 2011) 164 et seq.

⁹⁷ Act 30 of 1974.

⁹⁸ 2021 (1) SACR 387 (CC).

⁹⁹ Id paras 81 and 120.

¹⁰⁰ This provision provides:

'16 Special precautions in the interest of public safety as regards explosives

(1) Whenever the State President deems it necessary to take special precautions to maintain public order or to protect life and property he may, by proclamation in the Gazette, prohibit for such period as he may think fit the transportation of explosives from any one place to any other place in the Republic, except under such safeguards and conditions as are prescribed by regulation, and may make regulations, to be in force for such limited period as he may think fit, as to the transportation of explosives to and from particular areas, or as to the storage, removal, possession or use of explosives within any particular area by all persons or by persons of specified occupations or callings, and may limit or vary the conditions of any licences or permits held or to be issued under the Explosives Act, 1956 (Act 26 of 1956), or the regulations made thereunder.

(2) Any person who contravenes or fails to comply with the provisions of any proclamation or regulation issued under subsection (1) shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine or imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years or to both such a fine and such imprisonment.'

2.55 The abovementioned provision has been repealed by section 34 of the Explosives Act of 2003,¹⁰¹ the commencement of which is yet to be proclaimed. Therefore, section 16 will remain in place (operational) until section 34 comes into operation.¹⁰²

(iii) Section 17: incitement of public violence

2.56 Section 17 of the RAA reads:

17 Acts or conduct which constitute an incitement to public violence

A person shall be deemed to have committed the common law offence of incitement to public violence if, in any place whatever, he has acted or conducted himself in such a manner, or has spoken or published such words, that it might reasonably be expected that the natural and probable consequences of his act, conduct, speech or publication would, under the circumstances, be the commission of public violence by members of the public generally or by persons in whose presence the act or conduct took place or to whom the speech or publication was addressed.

2.57 In contrast to sections 16 and 18 of the RAA, this provision neither creates an offence,¹⁰³ nor prescribes punishment for its contravention. It takes it for granted that there is a common-law offence of incitement of public violence, and locates any conduct that fits the description contained therein within that common-law offence.

2.58 However, it alters the common law significantly. Firstly, it dispenses with the requirement that there should be actual communication between the inciter and the incitee.¹⁰⁴ Consequently, a person could be guilty of incitement to public violence even if his words are not heard by his audience.¹⁰⁵ Secondly, the specific intent to incite public violence is not a requirement.¹⁰⁶ All that is required is that the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct must lead to public violence. Furthermore, it is immaterial whether the accused's audience acted accordingly.¹⁰⁷

¹⁰¹ Act 15 of 2003.

¹⁰² See section 11 of the Interpretation Act 33 of 1957.

¹⁰³ JRL Milton South African Criminal Law and Procedure Vol II Common-law Crimes Third Edition (1996) 94 argues that a person should not be charged with the contravention of section 17 but with the crime of incitement to public violence in that he, within the meaning of section 17, committed certain acts the consequence of which is the commission of public violence by members of the public.

¹⁰⁴ Id 93.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid.

¹⁰⁶ AS Mathews Law, Order and Liberty in South Africa 196.

¹⁰⁷ JRL Milton 93.

(aa) Interplay with other laws

2.59 This provision exists alongside the common-law offence of incitement of public violence and section 18(2)(b) of the RAA which prohibits, inter alia, incitement to commit a common-law offence.¹⁰⁸ Section 18(2)(b) and the provision under consideration, it seems, traverse the same terrain.

(iv) Section 18: attempt, conspiracy and incitement

(aa) Attempt

2.60 Section 18(1) of the RAA provides:

Any person who attempts to commit any offence against a statute or a statutory regulation shall be guilty of an offence and, if no punishment is expressly provided thereby for such an attempt, be liable on conviction to the punishment to which a person convicted of actually committing that offence would be liable.

2.61 Attempts to commit common-law crimes are punishable in terms of common law.¹⁰⁹ This provision puts beyond any doubt that an attempt to commit a statutory offence is also punishable.¹¹⁰ Moreover, it encompasses provincial legislation and municipal by-laws.¹¹¹ There is a view, however, that attempts to commit statutory offences ought, according to general principles, also to be punishable in terms of the common law,¹¹² which raises questions about the necessity of this provision.

2.62 In practice, lesser punishment is usually imposed for attempt than for the completed crime.¹¹³

2.63 This provision is silent on whether voluntary withdrawal from a criminal act after the commencement of consummation but before the completion of the crime constitutes a defence to a charge in terms of this provision, particularly where withdrawal precedes the infliction of harm. It has been argued, contrary to our courts' approach, that voluntary withdrawal should ¹⁰⁸ See footnote below.

¹⁰⁹ CR Snyman Criminal Law Sixth Edition (2014) 276.

¹¹⁰ Jonathan Burchell Principles of Criminal Law Third Edition (2005) 622.

¹¹¹ See Snyman 276 footnote 2.

¹¹² Ibid. Jonathan Burchell above 623 footnote 21 provides that: 'since the rule that attempts are punishable stems from the common law, an attempt to contravene any penal legislation attracts liability (except, of course, where liability for attempt is excluded, expressly or impliedly, by the statute in question).' (Emphasis added).

¹¹³ Snyman 286.

be decriminalised.¹¹⁴ In other jurisdictions, voluntary withdrawal before the completion of the crime is treated as a defence.¹¹⁵

2.64 In contrast to German law,¹¹⁶ a person may be guilty of attempt in the United Kingdom even though the facts are such that the commission of the offence is impossible.¹¹⁷ Additionally, attempt to commit conspiracy is not an offence in the United Kingdom.¹¹⁸ Provisions of the German Criminal Code (GCC) relating to attempt may be instructive. The GCC expressly provides that an attempt to commit an offence may be punished more leniently than a completed offence.¹¹⁹ Furthermore, it states that a voluntary withdrawal is a defence.¹²⁰

(bb) Conspiracy

2.65 Section 18(2)(a) of this Act provides:

Any person who-

- (a) conspires with any other person to aid or procure the commission of or to commit;

¹¹⁴ Id 284-285.

¹¹⁵ Snyman 285 footnote 55 refers to section 24 of the German Penal Code, section 45 of the Penal Code of Netherlands, section 121-5 of the French Penal Code section 51 of the Penal Code of Belgium, section 21 and 22 of Penal Code of Switzerland, and section 16 of the Penal Code of Austria, in this regard.

¹¹⁶ Section 23 of the German Criminal Code provides:

'Liability for attempt

- (1) Any attempt to commit a felony entails criminal liability; this applies to attempted misdemeanours only if expressly so provided by law.
- (2) An attempt may be punished more leniently than the completed offence (section 49(1)).
- (3) If the offender due to gross ignorance fails to realise that the attempt could under no circumstances have led to the completion of the offence due to the nature of its object or the means by which it was to be committed, the court may order a discharge, or mitigate the sentence as it sees fit (section 49(2)).'

¹¹⁷ Section 1(2) of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 (United Kingdom) provides that: 'A person may be guilty of attempting to commit an offence to which this section applies even though the facts are such that the commission of the offence is impossible.'

¹¹⁸ Section 1(4) of the Criminal Attempts Act (United Kingdom).

¹¹⁹ Section 23(2) of the German Criminal Code.

¹²⁰ Section 24 of the German Criminal Code reads:

'Withdrawal

- (1) A person who of his own volition gives up the further execution of the offence or prevents its completion shall not be liable for the attempt. If the offence is not completed regardless of his actions, that person shall not be liable if he has made a voluntary and earnest effort to prevent the completion of the offence.
- (2) If more than one person participate in the offence, the person who voluntarily prevents its completion shall not be liable for the attempt. His voluntary and earnest effort to prevent the completion of the offence shall suffice for exemption from liability, if the offence is not completed regardless of his actions or is committed independently of his earlier contribution to the offence.'

...
any offence, whether at common law or against a statute or statutory regulation, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to the punishment to which a person convicted of actually committing that offence would be liable.'

2.66 With the exception of treason, conspiring to commit an offence is not a crime under South African common law.¹²¹ Section 18(2)(a) was intended to cure this lacuna in the law.¹²² This provision prohibits an agreement between two or more people to commit, aid or procure the commission of a crime. As soon as there is an agreement, the crime of conspiracy is complete and abandonment of the scheme, its implementation or lack thereof is no defence.¹²³ In contrast to the Roman-Dutch law (common law), which did not penalise a mere agreement without some act being done in pursuance thereof,¹²⁴ no outward manifestation of the offence is necessary.¹²⁵ This provision has been invoked in conspiracies relating to exchange control regulations;¹²⁶ Immorality Act;¹²⁷ and murder of people in South Africa,¹²⁸ neighbouring countries and abroad;¹²⁹ terrorism;¹³⁰ and kidnapping.¹³¹ The definition in section 18(2)(a) is wide enough to cover conspiracy to commit any crime.¹³² A few drawbacks of this crime have also been highlighted, for example, that its boundaries are vague and punishment can be used to suppress political dissent and to curb freedom of expression.¹³³

2.67 With regard to punishment, the conspirator is usually punished more leniently than the actual perpetrator¹³⁴ mainly because conspiracy does not usually result in the same harmful consequences as the commission of the main crime.¹³⁵

¹²¹ S v Basson 2007 (1) SACR 566 (CC) para 205.

¹²² Id para 207.

¹²³ Snyman 289. See also S v Basson para 209.

¹²⁴ JM Burchell South African Criminal Law and Procedure Volume I General Principles of Criminal Law (1997) 367.

¹²⁵ Jonathan Burchell 653.

¹²⁶ S v Bergmann 1977 (3) SA 589 (A).

¹²⁷ S v M 1971 (1) SA 207 (T) and R v S and Another 1960 (2) SA 446 (T).

¹²⁸ S v Libazi and Another 2010 (2) SACR 233 (SCA).

¹²⁹ S v Basson above.

¹³⁰ S v Moubaris and Others 1974 (1) SA 681 (T)

¹³¹ S v Fraser 2005 (1) SACR 455 (SCA).

¹³² S v Ngobese 2019 (1) SACR 575 (GJ).

¹³³ Jonathan Burchell 652.

¹³⁴ Id 657 footnote 45.

¹³⁵ Snyman 289.

2.68 Commentators have pointed out that this provision, like section 18(2)(b) which deals with incitement, does not distinguish between the situation where the crime is committed in pursuance of the conspiracy and where it is not. They opined that conspiracy should be limited to the latter for if the crime is committed, a conspirator who incited or took part in, its commission is liable for the crime itself and should be so charged.¹³⁶ This offence intersects with the common-purpose rule which provides a more vigorous sanction against group criminal activity, as a result it is rarely used in South Africa.¹³⁷ The overlap between conspiracy and common purpose requires further elucidation. Conspiracy is complete as soon as there is an agreement. Whereas, common purpose is a means of imputing liability to someone for the commission of a crime. The benefit of conspiracy liability is that it allows law enforcement officials to intervene as soon as there is an agreement to commit an offence. The parties do not have to proceed any further with the plan to be held liable. On the other hand, to be held liable by way of common purpose, the crime has to be committed. One form of common purpose liability is an agreement to offend. So where there has been a prior agreement for common purpose, there will have been an earlier conspiracy to commit crime. The distinction remains, however, that if the police make an arrest immediately after the agreement or conspiracy to commit an offence, then the accused will be charged with conspiracy; but where the crime is actually committed, after the original agreement, then the accused is charged with the crime in question and not merely conspiracy to commit the crime.

2.69 In S v Basson the question was whether section 18(2)(a) applied to criminal conspiracies to commit serious offences beyond the borders of South Africa, which the Constitutional Court answered in the affirmative.¹³⁸

2.70 In other jurisdictions too, conspiracy is a serious offence regulated by legislation. In these countries, unlike in South Africa, withdrawal from conspiracy is a defence;¹³⁹ failure to ¹³⁶ Snyman 287 and Jonathan Burchell 653.

¹³⁷ Jonathan Burchell 652.

¹³⁸ See S v Basson paras 188 et seq and 263; and S v Frederiksen 2018 (1) SACR 29 (FB).

¹³⁹ For example, section 31 of the German Penal Code provides that:

'Section 31

Withdrawal from conspiracy

(1) A person shall not be liable under section 30 if he voluntarily 1. gives up the attempt to induce another to commit a felony and averts any existing danger that the other may commit the offence; 2. after having declared his willingness to commit a felony, gives up his plan; or 3. after having agreed to commit a felony or accepted the offer of another to commit a felony prevents the commission of the offence.

report conspiracy is itself a punishable offence;¹⁴⁰ and certain categories of people are exempt from criminal liability, for example spouses, people who lack criminal capacity, and the conspirator if he or she is the intended victim of the offence.¹⁴¹

(cc) Incitement

2.71 Section 18(2)(b) of the RAA reads:

Any person who incites, instigates, commands or procures any other person to commit any offence, whether at common law or against a statute or statutory regulation, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to the punishment to which a person actually committing that offence would be liable.

2.72 Incitement is a crime both under the common law and in terms of section 18(2)(b).¹⁴² According to Justice Majiedt in Economic Freedom Fighters v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services, the RAA codified the common-law offence of incitement.¹⁴³ Section 18(2)(b) prohibits reaching out and seeking to influence the mind of another towards the commission of a crime, whether the incitee is amenable or not.¹⁴⁴ Consequently, there must be communication, verbally or by conduct, which must reach the mind of the incitee. If it does not, then there is an attempted incitement.¹⁴⁵ Furthermore, a person should be charged with this offence if incitement has been unsuccessful.

2.73 The rationale for the existence of this offence is to empower authorities to maintain law and order; to prevent the commission of a crime at an early stage before harm is done; and to prevent group criminality.¹⁴⁶ In addition, while located in what it described as a law of “apartheid extraction” which was the “regime’s backlash against the momentous adoption of

(2) If the offence is not completed regardless of his actions or if it is committed independently of his previous conduct, his voluntary and earnest effort to prevent the completion of the offence shall suffice for exemption from liability.’

¹⁴⁰ Section 135 of the Criminal Code of Netherlands.

¹⁴¹ Section 2 of the Criminal Law 1977 (United Kingdom).

¹⁴² See Jonathan Burchell Principles of Criminal Law Third Edition 642 and cases cited therein.

¹⁴³ 2021 (1) SACR 387 (CC) para 88.

¹⁴⁴ Jonathan Burchell 642.

¹⁴⁵ Id 642-3.

¹⁴⁶ Snyman 290 and Burchell 642.

the Freedom Charter”, the Constitutional Court has stated that section 18(2)(b) serves a legitimate government purpose, particularly in the fight against crime.¹⁴⁷

(dd) Constitutionality of section 18(2)(b)

2.74 In Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services and Another, section 18(2)(b) was challenged on the basis that it was too broad, in that it criminalises incitement of others to commit “any offence”, and on the ground that it infringed the right to freedom of expression in section 16 of the Constitution.¹⁴⁸

2.75 First, the court dealt with the meaning of the right to freedom of expression.¹⁴⁹ It stated that this right:¹⁵⁰

- is the lifeblood of democracy, it keeps it vibrant, stable and peaceful;
- provides a virtual exhaust pipe through which venomous of toxicities may be let out to help citizens calm down, heal, focus and move on;
- ensures accountability;
- it is an essential and constitutive feature of our democratic society;¹⁵¹ and that subsection (2) thereof:

- empowers government to prohibit, through legislation, incitement to cause war, violence and hatred;

and that:

- the prohibition of activities and expressions that pose a real and substantial threat to constitutional values and order itself is permissible.

2.76 Turning its attention to section 18(2)(b), the court held that criminalisation of incitement to commit “any offence” constituted a limitation of protected expression.¹⁵² Assessing whether this provision could be saved under section 36 of the Constitution,¹⁵³ the court held that it could ¹⁴⁷ See Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services paras 4, 41, 51, 66, 82-84 and 119.

¹⁴⁸ Economic Freedom Fighters v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services para 30.

¹⁴⁹ See note 68 above.

¹⁵⁰ Id paras 1, 2 and 30-33. See also paras 42-45.

¹⁵¹ Id para 95.

¹⁵² Id para 34. Justice Majiedt, writing for the minority, came to similar conclusion. See para 90.

¹⁵³ Section 36 of the Constitution reads:

not,¹⁵⁴ because it extended to minor offences or offences that threaten no serious harm or danger either to individuals, society or public order or the economy.¹⁵⁵ This law, the court further explained, failed to differentiate between serious and lesser, yet not trivial, offences; had the potential to inhibit free expression; and thus prevented all expression in the form of incitement or advocacy.¹⁵⁶ The court concluded that “any offence” is unquestionably overbroad and its inhibition of free expression markedly disproportionate to its conceivable benefits to society.¹⁵⁷ It circumscribed the breadth of this offence by inserting the word “serious” between “any” and “offence” in section 18(2)(b).¹⁵⁸ This is, as the court emphasised, an interim remedy that could and should, particularly because of its practical challenges,¹⁵⁹ be further refined or changed by Parliament.¹⁶⁰ The court gave Parliament two years to remedy the defect.¹⁶¹

2.77 The minority decision underscored that:

- (a) incitement is a crime practically in every legal system; and that in contrast to the United States where speech is only punishable if it is directed at inciting or producing

‘Limitation of rights

- (1) The rights in the Bill of Rights may be limited only in terms of law of general application to the extent that the limitation is reasonable and justifiable in an open and democratic society based on human dignity, equality and freedom, taking into account all relevant factors, including-
- (a) the nature of the right;
 - (b) the importance of the purpose of the limitation;
 - (c) the nature and extent of the limitation;
 - (d) the relation between the limitation and its purpose; and
 - (e) less restrictive means to achieve the purpose.
- (2) Except as provided in subsection (1) or in any other provision of the Constitution, no law may limit any right entrenched in the Bill of Rights.’

¹⁵⁴ The court observed that the state failed to provide reasonable grounds to justify overbreadth of this provision. See in this regard, Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services para 53-55.

¹⁵⁵ Id para 51. In respect of the requirement of seriousness, see para 42 and 46-51.

¹⁵⁶ Id para 56.

¹⁵⁷ Id para 61.

¹⁵⁸ Id para 68.

¹⁵⁹ The court conceded that: ‘...what is serious to some may not necessarily be serious to others. There is therefore an element of fluidity in relation to which offences are then to be understood as envisaged by ‘any serious offence.’ This raises the question: what is the meaning of ‘serious’ and how is ‘serious’ to be measured or determined?’ Id para 69.

¹⁶⁰ For pointers that could be used in the interim, see para 69-71.

¹⁶¹ This period expired on 27 November 2022.

imminent lawless action, in other jurisdictions, seriousness, imminent violence or harmfulness are not prerequisites for criminal liability;¹⁶² and that

- (b) the remedy, to include the element of seriousness in the offence of incitement, would lead to considerable uncertainty, could cause some injustice, ushers in the real risk of vagueness, and appeared to be a usurpation of law-making function of the legislature and may narrow the policy choices available to the legislature.¹⁶³

2.78 The Canadian Criminal Code defines “serious offence” as an indictable offence under the Code or another Act of Parliament for which the maximum punishment is imprisonment for five years or more or another offence prescribed by the regulations.¹⁶⁴ In the United Kingdom, the Serious Crimes Act 2007 contains a list of serious offences, which includes inchoate crimes of attempt, conspiracy and conspiring and encouraging or assisting in the commission of an offence.¹⁶⁵

(ee) Sanction prescribed by section 18(1) and (2) and its constitutionality

2.79 Section 18(1) and (2) stipulate that a person convicted of conspiracy or incitement is “liable...to the punishment to which a person convicted of actually committing that offence would be liable.” However, in practice the courts have always exercised discretion when determining the appropriate punishment and in most cases impose a lighter sentence.¹⁶⁶ This approach has been reaffirmed by the Constitutional Court, following the declaration of constitutional invalidity of part of section 18(2)(b) that deals with sanction by the High Court.¹⁶⁷ The Constitutional Court held in this regard:

The word ‘liable’ does not connote inescapability, compulsion or absence of judicial discretion. Its ordinary meaning is that the inciter is susceptible to the ¹⁶² Per Majiedt J paras 106-118.

¹⁶³ Id paras 149-153.

¹⁶⁴ Section 467.1 of the Canadian Criminal Code.

¹⁶⁵ Schedule 1 of the Serious Crimes Act 2007 lists the following as serious offences in England and Wales: drug trafficking; people trafficking; arms trafficking; prostitution and child sex; armed robbery; money laundering; fraud; offences relating to public revenue; corruption and bribery; counterfeiting; blackmail; intellectual property crimes; environment related offences; and inchoate crimes.

¹⁶⁶ See, for example, S v Bergmann, S v M, and R v S referred to above.

¹⁶⁷ The High Court in Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development and Another 2019 (2) SACR 297 (GP) considered, of its own accord, the portion of section 18(2)(b) dealing with sanction and declared it unconstitutional on the basis that it compels the court to impose same sentence on the person inciting others to commit a crime as on the person who actually committed the crime.

same punishment or might have the same punishment visited upon him or her as the actual perpetrator.¹⁶⁸

(c) Issues to which Commission sought input and responses thereto

2.80 As not all the issues were as straightforward and uncontroversial as the constitutionality of the long title, which the Commission recommended should be repealed or substituted; or section 16, which will become inoperative when the relevant provision in the Explosives Act of 2003 comes into effect, the Commission invited comments on the following complex and intractable legal issues arising from the remaining provisions of the RAA:

- (a) whether section 17 (incitement of public violence) was constitutional and consistent with the right to freedom of expression in section 16 of the Constitution; and secondly whether there is a need for it in view of the existence of the common-law offence of public violence;
- (b) whether section 18(1) (attempt to commit statutory offence) should be amended to make provision for the defence of voluntary withdrawal and whether it is still necessary;
- (c) whether section 18(2)(a) (conspiracy) should be retained in the statute book although it seems to traverse the same terrain as the common-law doctrine of common purpose; and whether voluntary withdrawal from conspiracy should constitute a defence and whether failure to report conspiracy should be criminalised; and
- (d) whether the crime of incitement contemplated in section 18(2)(b) is still necessary in view of the existence of a similar offence under the common law.

2.81 Whilst other respondents were of the view that:

- (a) for reasons expressed by Justice Majiedt in the EFF case, the long title of this Act should be repealed;
- (b) in view of existing alternatives, there is no need for section 17;
- (c) section 17 is unconstitutional, as the broad wording of this section would render much legitimate expression unlawful, which amounts to infringement of section 16(1)(b) of the Constitution;
- (d) section 18(1) of the RAA is not necessary and if it remains in force, then it should be amended to provide for the defence of voluntary withdrawal, in a similar manner to that provided in section 24 of the German Criminal Code;
- (e) the crime of conspiracy in section 18(2)(a) should not be retained for reasons articulated in paragraph 2.45 and 2.47 of the issue paper;

¹⁶⁸ See Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services and Another above paras 25-29.

- (f) if the crime of conspiracy is retained, then it should be amended to provide for the defence of voluntary withdrawal in a similar manner to that provided in section 31 of the German Criminal Code;
- (g) failure to report conspiracy should not attract criminal prosecution and sanction;
- (h) some consideration may need to be given to the evidentiary rule that a statement made by person A is admissible against person B if A and B were associated with the commission of the crime and the statement was made in furtherance of their common purpose;
- (i) the statutory offence of incitement in section 18(2)(b) is unnecessary to the extent that its elements are the same as the common-law offence of incitement;
- (j) furthermore, there are other statutory provisions of which specific instances of incitement are separately punishable as independent offences, either by themselves (for instance, section 19 of the Sexual Offences Act which prohibits enticing to commission of an immoral act), or in relation to another specific offence;
- (k) the common-law offence of incitement may well attract similar criticism by the Constitutional Court as the statutory offence, this possibility favours the retention of section 18(2)(b), subject to amendment;
- (l) the statutory offence of incitement should proscribe all violent crimes (those that cause harm or injury or the risk thereof to persons, and damage to property), crimes that impact upon the fiscus and public resources, and crimes that conduce to hatred; and that;
- (m) the formulation in the Canadian Criminal Code referred to in paragraph 2.57 of the issue paper is preferable to the vague and overly broad words 'serious offence'; and
- (n) the DOJ&CD informed the Commission that the Conspiracy, Instigation and Incitement to Commit Offence Bill which is intended to repeal the remaining provisions of the Riotous Assemblies Act has been prepared and will be introduced in Parliament after the upcoming elections.

(d) Recommendation

2.82 As the questions whether the current provisions of the RAA should be retained, with or without amendments, will soon be receiving the attention of the legislature, they will not be considered further as part of this inquiry. It is, however, hoped that the invaluable comments and views contained in this discussion paper will be taken on board or considered during the legislative process leading up to the adoption of the proposed legislation.

2 Trespass Act 6 of 1959

2.83 The Trespass Act has been earmarked for repeal in the Unlawful Entering on Premises Bill recently introduced by the Department of Justice in Parliament and will thus not be considered further in this paper.

3 Indemnity Acts of 1961 and 1977

(a) Indemnity Act 61 of 1961

2.84 The Indemnity Act of 1961 has two sections. Section 2 contains the short title. Section 1 has four subsections that indemnify the apartheid government, its officers and all other persons acting under its authority, in respect of acts done, orders given or information provided in good faith for the prevention or suppression of internal disorder, the maintenance or restoration of good order, public safety and essential services, or the preservation of life or property.

2.85 The origins of this law can be traced to a promise made by the Minister of Justice in the aftermath of the Sharpeville massacre in March 1961, in which he undertook, following civil claims for damages, to promulgate legislation to indemnify the government and its officials retrospectively against claims resulting from actions taken during demonstration.¹⁶⁹ This Act provides immunity against civil claims and criminal liability.¹⁷⁰

2.86 The Truth and Reconciliation Commission classified this law as security legislation.¹⁷¹

2.87 This Act was superseded by the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act of 1995¹⁷² which, inter alia, made provision for the granting of amnesty to persons who made full disclosure of all facts relating to gross violation of human rights between 1 March 1960 and 8 October 1990. The 1995 legislation, neither repealed the Indemnity Acts of 1961 and 1977 alluded to below, nor expressly recognised indemnity or immunity granted by them.¹⁷³

¹⁶⁹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report Volume One (29 October 1998) 458-459.

¹⁷⁰ Section 1(1) of the Indemnity Act of 1961.

¹⁷¹ Truth and Reconciliation Commission report above 449 and 458-459.

¹⁷² Act 34 of 1995.

¹⁷³ In contrast, section 48 of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act provides:
'Acts repealed

(b) Indemnity Act 13 of 1977

2.88 The Indemnity Act of 1977, like the Indemnity Act of 1961, gave immunity to the former government and its officials from civil and criminal proceedings for acts committed on or after 16 June 1976.

(c) Issues to which Commission sought input and responses thereto

2.89 The Commission, having had regard to the provenance and purpose of these laws (to shield perpetrators of human rights violations from accountability); and pertinent legislative developments and reforms, solicited comments on whether:

- (a) these laws are still relevant and constitutional, particularly in view of our constitutional commitment to equality; and
- (b) whether they were not displaced (impliedly repealed) by the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act which deals with the same subject-matter.

2.90 The input received confirmed the Commission's view that these laws have served the purpose they were enacted for and that they seem to fall foul of the constitutional imperative that 'everyone is equal before the law'. There is thus support for their repeal. According to the DOJ&CD, their revocation would remove any uncertainty about whether they were impliedly repealed by the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act 34 of 1995.

(d) Recommendation

2.91 The Commission thus recommends that the two indemnity laws referred to above be repealed in their entirety.

-
- (1) The Indemnity Act, 1990 (Act 35 of 1990), the Indemnity Amendment Act, 1992 (Act 124 of 1992), and the Further Indemnity Act, 1992 (Act 151 of 1992), are hereby repealed.
 - (2) Any indemnity granted under the provisions of the Indemnity Act, 1990, the Indemnity Amendment Act, 1992, or the Further Indemnity Act, 1992, shall remain in force notwithstanding the repeal of those Acts.
 - (3) Any temporary immunity or indemnity granted under an Act repealed in terms of subsection (1) shall remain in force for a period of 12 months after the date referred to in section 7 (3) notwithstanding the repeal of that Act.'

4 Prohibition of Disguises Act 16 of 1969

(a) Overview of the provisions and purpose of this Act

2.92 The Prohibition of Disguises Act is a general Act that prohibits the concealment of identity in public places.¹⁷⁴ Its roots can be traced back to colonial times and it was intended to consolidate splintered and varying provincial laws.¹⁷⁵ It has four sections,¹⁷⁶ the most important of which is section 1, which provides:

1 Penalties for being in disguise in suspicious circumstances

(1) Any person found disguised in any manner whatsoever and whether effectively or not, in circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred that such person has the intention of committing or inciting, encouraging or aiding any other person to commit, some offence or other, shall, unless he proves that when so found he had no such intention, be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred rand or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

(2) In any prosecution for a contravention of subsection (1) it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that the circumstances in which the accused was found, gave rise to an inference that he had the intention of committing or inciting, encouraging or aiding any other person to commit, any particular offence.

2.93 It has been averred that this Act serves a useful purpose of enabling law enforcement officers to intervene at an early stage in the criminal process, before more serious crime, intended by the accused, is committed.¹⁷⁷

¹⁷⁴ The Regulation of Gatherings Act 205 of 1993, administered by the Department of Police, prohibits disguises in the context of public assemblies or public. Section 8(7) thereof provides: 'No person shall at any gathering or demonstration wear a disguise or mask or any other apparel or item which obscures his facial features and prevents his identification.'

¹⁷⁵ For examples of colonial and post-Union legislation dealing with the same subject-matter, see Shannon Hocter 'The Offence of Being Found in Disguise in Suspicious Circumstances' Obiter (2013) 316.

¹⁷⁶ Section 2 is a repeal provision (provides that laws in the schedule have been repealed); section 3 was repealed in 1996; and section 4 contains the short title (the name of this Act).

¹⁷⁷ Shannon Hocter above 319-321.

(b) Concerns about this legislation

2.94 There was a concern that this Act targeted people engaging in the practice of transvestism.¹⁷⁸ Of course, the right to equality, in particular section 9(3), adequately addresses this matter. Secondly, the words “unless he proves that when so found he had no such intention” in section 1 quoted above shifts the burden of proof to the accused and is thus a typical reverse onus provision. Thus once the state has established that the accused was found in circumstances from which an intention to commit a crime may reasonably be inferred, it is incumbent upon him or her to prove that he had no such intention. The Constitutional Court has, in a number of cases,¹⁷⁹ declared reverse onus provisions unconstitutional on the basis that they infringe the constitutional right of the accused to be presumed innocent.¹⁸⁰ However, it has been argued that given the important function it serves, this provision should not be repealed, but should be replaced with an evidentiary burden.¹⁸¹ Section 1(2) further relieves the state of proving crucial elements of this offence.

(c) International best practice

2.95 New Zealand, Canada, and the United Kingdom have laws criminalising the use of disguises.¹⁸² In these jurisdictions, it is incumbent upon the state to establish that the accused had the intention to commit a crime. In Canada, for example, the court quashed a conviction where it was established that the accused was wearing a handkerchief over his face, but proof of intent to commit crime was lacking. The United Kingdom’s Criminal Justice and Public Order Act does not per se prohibit the wearing of masks, but empowers the police to require any person to remove any disguise which he or she believes that person is wearing wholly or mainly to conceal his identity. Failure to abide with the police instruction constitutes an offence.¹⁸³ The Canadian Criminal Code also provides that every person who takes part in a riot while wearing a mask or other disguise to conceal their identity is guilty of an offence and liable to five years imprisonment; and that every person who commits an offence of unlawful assembly while wearing a mask is equally guilty of an offence and liable to the same punishment.

¹⁷⁸ Ibid.

¹⁷⁹ See S v Zuma 1995 (2) SA 642 (CC); S v Bhulwana 1996 (1) SA 388 (CC); S v Coetzee 1997 (3) SA 527 (CC); S v Manamela 2000 (1) SACR 414 (CC).

¹⁸⁰ Section 35(3)(h) of the Constitution.

¹⁸¹ Shannon Hocter above 319.

¹⁸² See section 233(1)(b) of the Crimes Act (New Zealand); section 351 of the Criminal Code (Canada); and section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (United Kingdom).

¹⁸³ See in regard, Shannon Hocter 321.

(d) Issues to which the Commission wanted comments and responses thereto

2.96 The Commission solicited input, inter alia, on whether:

- (a) the reverse onus provision in section 1(1) of the Prohibition of Disguises Act should be abrogated;
- (b) any unintended consequences would flow from the repealing of section 1(2) in its entirety;
- (c) section 1(2) should be amended to expressly require the state to allege and prove that the accused intended to commit an offence; and
- (d) whether the respondents agreed that the reverse onus provision in 1(1) serves an important purpose and that it should be replaced with an evidentiary burden and how such a provision should be couched.

2.97 The DOJ&CD supports the removal of section 1(1). It stated in this regard:

Section 1(1) must indeed be amended to remove the reverse onus provision as that is unconstitutional. The removal of a reverse onus provision in section 1(1) would require the prosecution to prove intention. As a result, section 1(2) would be rendered unnecessary and must therefore be repealed. The reverse onus provision is unconstitutional and the expression "...unless he proves that when so found he had no such intention..." must be severed from the section. This would have the effect of giving the prosecution the evidentiary burden of proving its case.

2.98 It further added that the entire Act must be repealed and replaced by a new Act that would retain provisions of this Act that are still deemed relevant and useful; that would be aligned to the Constitution and modern legislative drafting conventions; and that would be free of archaic terminology.

2.99 Furthermore, it stated that the penalties that may be imposed by the court may have to be reviewed.

2.100 The Cape Bar Council has expressed similar sentiments. In fact, according to it the deletion of the word "not" in section 1(2) of this Act would remove the reverse onus contained therein.

(e) Recommendation

2.101 The Commission agrees that such a critical law requires substantive, systemic development and reform and that this has to be done properly rather than hastily and piecemeal fashion. For these reasons, it recommends that the DOJ&CD explore mechanisms and avenues to achieve this goal.

5 Criminal Procedure Act 51 of 1977

2.102 The Commission, in collaboration with the DOJ&CD, has embarked on the review of the criminal justice system which encompasses the complete overhaul of the Criminal Procedure Act (CPA). Therefore, all the issues relating to sections 25, 185, 205 and 236 and raised in the issue paper and comments relating thereto received by the Commission will be forwarded to the team dealing with this Act for consideration.

6 Section 44 of the General Law Further Amendment Act 93 of 1962

(a) Overview

2.103 The General Law Further Amendment Act of 1962 not only amended various laws, but also prescribed in section 44, the only provision in the Act administered by the DOJ&CD,¹⁸⁴ penalties for the defacement or disfigurement of property. To that end, it prescribes an additional penalty of six months for the defacement of movable or immovable property belonging to the State or private person; empowers the court to impose a fine equal to the cost or estimated cost of restoring the property or an additional period of 12 months in default of payment thereof; and requires that any amount recovered be paid over to the owner of the defaced or disfigured property.¹⁸⁵

¹⁸⁴ See <https://www.justice.gov.za/legislation/acts/dojcd-acts-administered.pdf>

¹⁸⁵ The aforesaid provision reads:

'44 Penalties for defacement or disfigurement of property

- (1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any other law contained, any person who commits an offence by placing any placard, poster, writing, word, letter, sign, symbol, drawing or other mark on any property, whether movable or immovable, of any other person or of the State, and thereby defaces or disfigures such property, shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months in lieu of or in addition to any other penalty which may be imposed in respect of such an offence.
- (2) If the court imposing upon a person over the age of eighteen years any penalty in respect of an offence referred to in subsection (1), is satisfied that the property

2.104 The fact that this provision was promulgated at the time when an epidemic of political slogans broke out and is considered a political offence,¹⁸⁶ may be indicative of its purpose, namely to stifle the exercise of political rights and freedom of expression. It renders punishable offences which, because of their trivial nature, do not constitute an offence under common law, for example graffiti.¹⁸⁷ Furthermore, it has been slated on the basis that it dispenses with the requirement of culpability and the gravity of the disfigurement is irrelevant.¹⁸⁸ The common-law crime of malicious injury to property covers this conduct.

(b) Input received

2.105 In the issue paper, the Commission asked whether section 44(1)-(4) of the General Law Further Amendment Act 93 of 1962 was still relevant and necessary.

2.106 The DOJ&CD submitted that section 44(1)-(4) is still relevant in the current constitutional dispensation and continues to serve the useful purpose of penalising intentional acts of damage to property. It, however, proposed that consideration should be given to moving this provision to the CPA “to avoid scattering of sections in various statutes.”

2.107 The Cape Bar Council, on the other hand, is of the view that these provisions are no longer necessary for reasons set out in paragraph 2.84 of the Commission issue paper and support their repeal.

concerned belongs to some particular person or to the State and if the owner of such property does not apply under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act 51 of 1977) for compensation, the court shall, in addition to such penalty sentence the convicted person to a fine equal to the cost or estimated cost of restoration of such property less any such cost which may have been paid to such owner or imprisonment for a period not exceeding twelve months in default of payment of the fine and the convicted person shall serve such additional sentence of imprisonment after the expiration of any other sentence of imprisonment imposed upon him in respect of such offence except where the operation of such other sentence has been suspended in which case he shall commence to serve the additional sentence forthwith.

- (3) Such fine may be recovered in the manner provided in section 288 of the said Act and any amount recovered shall be paid to the owner of the property defaced or disfigured.
- (4) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any other law contained, a magistrate's court other than the court of a regional division shall have jurisdiction to impose summarily any sentence in respect of an offence referred to in subsection (1) which the court of a regional division may impose.'

¹⁸⁶ See in this regard, AS Mathews Law, Order and Liberty in South Africa (1971) 220.

¹⁸⁷ Gerhard Van Rooyen 'Graffiti: Is the Writing on the Wall?' South African Journal of Criminal Justice No.2 (2001) 238.

¹⁸⁸ AS Mathews above.

(c) Recommendation

2.108 According to the DOJ&CD, section 44 of the General Law Further Amendment Act will be relocated to another statute and, by implication, the current section will be repealed. In light of this, the Commission recommends it be retained to avoid creating a lacuna in the law until the new provision is enacted with or without amendments.

GENERAL LAWS AMENDMENT BILL

To repeal certain pre-constitutional era laws of the Republic; and to provide for incidental matters

BE IT ENACTED by the Parliament of the Republic of South Africa, as follows:

- 1 Repeal of laws
 - (1) The laws specified in the First Schedule are hereby repealed.
 - (2) The laws specified in the Second Schedule are hereby amended to the extent set out in the third column of that Schedule.
- 2 Savings

The repeal of any law by this Act shall not –

 - (1) revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect;
 - (2) affect previous operation of any law so repealed or anything duly done or suffered under the law so repealed;
 - (3) affect any right, privilege, obligation, liability or indemnity acquired, accrued, incurred or granted under any law so repealed;
- 3 Short title and commencement

This Act shall be called the General Laws Amendment Act, ...and comes into operation on a date determined by the President by proclamation in the Gazette.

Schedule 1

Number and year of law	Title or subject of law	Extent of Repeal
Ordinance 1 of 1838 (Cape of Good Hope)	Sunday Observance Ordinance	The whole
Act 19 of 1895 (Cape of Good Hope)	Lord's Day Observance Act	The whole
Act 28 of 1896 (Transvaal)	Sunday Law	The whole
Ordinance 21 of 1902 (Free State)	Police Ordinance	Section 21
Act 139 of 1991	Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act, 1993	The whole
Act 61 of 1961	Indemnity Act, 1961	The whole
Act 13 of 1977	Indemnity Act, 1977	The whole

Schedule 2

Number and year of law	Title or subject of law	Extent of Repeal or amendment
Act 19 of 1973	South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973	Amendment of section 7 by the substitution for section 7 of the following section: Reports of the Commission (4) The Commission shall- (a) prepare a full report in regard to any matter investigated by it and shall submit such report together with draft legislation, if any, prepared by it, to the Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, for consideration; and (b) publish every report submitted to the Minister, and any relevant portfolio Minister, pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection. (5) The Commission shall within five months of the end of a financial year of the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development submit to the Minister a report on all its activities during that financial year. (6) The report referred to in subsection (2) shall be laid upon the Table in Parliament by the Minister within fourteen days after it was submitted to [the Minister] him or her, if Parliament is then in session, or, if Parliament is not then in session, within 14 days after the commencement of its next ensuing session. Substitution for section 10 of the following section: 10 Regulations (1) The Minister may make regulations regarding the administration and functioning of the Commission or any other aspect of this Act.

		(2) Any regulation made under this section must be tabled in Parliament before the publication thereof in the Gazette. Insertion of section 11 11 Short title This Act shall be called the South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973
--	--	---

LIST OF SOURCES

Bell Dewar & Hall Attorneys Kelsey Stuart's Newspaperman's Guide to the Law Fifth Edition (1990)

Botha C Statutory Interpretation: An Introduction for Students Fifth Edition (2012)

Botha C Statutory Interpretation: An Introduction for Students Third Edition (1998)

Burchell J Principles of Criminal Law Third Edition (2005)

Burchell JM South African Criminal Law and Procedure Volume I General Principles of Criminal Law (1997)

Currie I and De Waal J 'Chapter Sixteen: Expression' in The Bill of Rights Handbook Fifth Edition (2005) 358

Currie I and De Waal Johan The Bill of Rights Handbook Fifth Edition (2005)

Dugard J Human Rights and the South African Legal Order (1977)

Flint S 'The Use of Police Force in Dispersing Gatherings' SA Publiekreg/Public Law Volume 1 Issue 2 (1986) 152

Hansard 22 November 2016

Hjul P 'Restricting Freedom of Speech or Regulating Gatherings' De Jure (2013) 451

Hoctor S 'The Offence of Being Found in Disguise in Suspicious Circumstances' Obiter (2013) 316

Hurlburt QC, WH Law Reform Commissions in the United Kingdom, Australia and Canada (1986)

Joubert JJ (ed) Criminal Procedure Handbook Thirteen Edition (2020)

Mathews A Freedom, State Security and the Rule of Law: Dilemmas of the Apartheid Society (1986)

Mathews AS Law, Order and Liberty in South Africa (1971)

Milton JRL South African Criminal Law and Procedure Volume II Common-law Crimes Third Edition (1996)

Pienaar G 'Freedom of Association in the United States and South Africa' CILSA (1993) 147

Snyman CR Criminal Law Sixth Edition (2014)

South African Law Reform Commission Discussion Paper 129- Project 25: Statutory Law Revision- Legislation Administered by the Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (October 2011)

South African Law Reform Commission Project 101: Application of the Bill of Rights to Criminal Procedure, Criminal Law, the Law of Evidence and Sentencing Report (May 2001)

The Commonwealth Secretariat Commonwealth Association of Law Reform Agencies Changing the Law: A Practical Guide to Law Reform (2017)

Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa Report Volume One (October 1998)

United Nations Centre Against Apartheid Restrictions Imposed on the Media in South Africa Since 21 July 1987 United Nations (September 1987)

Van der Vyver JD (Revised by Church J) 'Religion' in the Law of South Africa First Reissue 23 Volume 23 (2003) 141

Van Rooyen G 'Graffiti: Is the Writing on the Wall?' South African Journal of Criminal Justice (2001) 238

Warner K 'Institutional Architecture' in Opeskin B and Weisbrot D (eds) The Promise of Law Reform (2005) 55

SELECTED CASES

Control Magistrate, Durban v Azanian Peoples Organisation 1986 (3) SA 394 (A)

Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Correctional Services and Another 2021 (1) SACR 387 (CC)

Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Minister of Justice and Constitutional Development and Another 2019 (2) SACR 297 (GP)

Erasmus and Others NNO v SA Associated Newspapers Ltd and Others 1979 (3) SA 447 (W)

Government of the Republic of South Africa v 'Sunday Times' Newspaper and Another 1995 (2) SA 221 (T)

Munusamy v Hefer 2004 (5) SA 112 (O)

Ndabeni v Minister of Law and Order 1984 (3) SA 500 (D)

Nel v Le Roux 1996 (3) SA 562 (CC)

R v Big M Drug Mart Ltd (1985) 13 CRR 64

R v S and Another 1960 (2) SA 446 (T)

S v Basson 2007 (1) SACR 566 (CC)

S v Bergmann 1977 (3) SA 589 (A)

S v Bhulwana 1996 (1) SA 388 (CC)

S v Coetzee 1997 (3) SA 527 (CC)

S v Cornelissen 1994 (2) SACR 41 (W)

S v Fraser 2005 (1) SACR 455 (SCA)

S v Lawrence, S v Negal, S v Solberg 1997 (2) SACR 540 (CC)

S v Libazi and Another 2010 (2) SACR 233 (SCA)

S v M 1971 (1) SA 207 (T)

S v Manamela 2000 (1) SACR 414 (CC)

S v Moumbaris and Others 1974 (1) SA 681 (T)

S v Ngobese 2019 (1) SACR 575 (GJ)

S v Sparks NO and Others 1980 (3) SA 952 (T)

S v Zuma 1995 (2) SA 642 (CC)

Wolpe v Officer Commanding South African Police, Johannesburg 1955 (2) SA 87 (W)

LEGISLATION

Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996

Commissions Act, 1947 (Act 8 of 1947)

Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1993 (Act 200 of 1993)

Criminal Procedure Act, 1977 (Act 51 of 1977)

General Law Further Amendment Act, 1962 (Act 93 of 1962)

Indemnity Act, 1961 (Act 61 of 1961)

Indemnity Act, 1977 (Act 13 of 1977)

Inquests Act, 1959 (Act 58 of 1959)

Lord's Day Observance Act, 1895 (Act 19 of 1895): Cape Province

Police Offences Ordinance, 1902 (Ordinance No. 21 of 1902): Free State

Prevention of Public Violence and Intimidation Act, 1991 (Act 139 of 1991)

Prohibition of Disguises Act, 1969 (Act 16 of 1969)

Prohibition of the Exhibition of Films on Sundays and Public Holidays Act, 1977 (Act 16 of 1977)

Protection of Information Act, 1982 (Act 84 of 1982)

Riotous Assemblies Act, 1956 (Act 17 of 1956)

South African Law Reform Commission Act, 1973 (Act 19 of 1973)

Sunday Law, 1896 (Act 28 of 1896): Transvaal

Sunday Observance Ordinance, 1838 (Ordinance No. 1 of 22 March 1838): Cape Province

Trespass Act, 1959 (Act 6 of 1959)